

Let's Get Technical:

Data Security Ethics for Law Firms

1 ETHICS CLE*
CREDIT
AVAILABLE

One in four law firms has had some sort of data breach costing them an average of $4 million. Discover how you can protect yourself and your clients with topics like:

Your Professional Responsibility

Ethics rules, both from the ABA and state organizations, impose duties on attorneys to protect client information. These rules require attorneys to practice competently and to supervise office staff and third parties with access to client data. The failure to protect client data may lead to attorney discipline or malpractice liability.

Ways Law Firms are Being Targeted

As technology develops, hacking by "brute force" is no longer the most common method of data breach for law firms. Discover the different ways law firm information is being hacked and how, in the world of cybersecurity, people are considered the weakest link. They are also both the most abundant resource and the most susceptible target. Most hacks are the result of phishing expeditions and social engineering. Learn how to identify and combat hacking both personally and at the firm level. Understand more about sophisticated breaches, including ransomware.

Responding to Real or Potential Hacks

In order to minimize the damage to their reputation and valuable client relationships, law firms — just like any other business — need to be poised to respond nimbly and competently to a breach.

Tips to Shield You from Hackers

Learn the top 10 things a law firm can do to improve cyber defenses and lower the firm's risk profile.

Contact your local representative or register to reserve your seat at: www.capitalreportingcompany.com/cle

Capital Reporting Company provides superior court reporting and litigation services to the legal industry. With a proven track record of industry excellence and providing technology-driven deposition and litigation support services to law firms and corporations. For more information, go to www.capitalreportingcompany.com.