Are you looking to make the best record possible?

Discover inside tips on navigating the ins and outs of taking a deposition and topics like:

The Role of the Court Reporter.

Review and discuss the specific role of the Court Reporter at the Deposition including official record maintenance, objections, and timekeeping.

Noticing a Deposition. Identify information that needs to be included when serving a potential witness with a deposition notice and your intent to record the deposition in any manner, including video and any additional technology being utilized at the deposition.

Ancillary Services. Need your deposition videotaped? How about an interpreter? We'll review what services court reporting agencies can provide.

On the Record/Off the Record. When can the deposition officer stop writing? We'll review local rules with regards to suspending the taking of testimony during a deposition.

Exhibits. When questioning the witness about documents, the originals are generally marked and attached to the original deposition transcript. We'll go over the most effective ways to mark exhibits and maintain a clean record.

Realtime. Court reporters can deliver testimony to your laptop or iPad within seconds of being spoken. You can also review testimony and make notes using realtime software. We'll show you the realtime software options that are available and how you can use a realtime feed to your advantage.

Stipulations & Court Orders. Whether your case is in State or Federal Court, the court reporter needs to know where and to whom the original transcript gets delivered. We'll even review what happens in the absence of a stipulation or Court Order.
