What do horse-drawn carriages, telegrams and bankers boxes have in common?

They've been replaced by postmodern technologies.

Discover the newest (paperless) ways evidence can be captured during an educational exploration of:

The Current Process. Review and discuss the current process of exhibit introduction and distribution during the deposition.

Changes in the Deposition Environment. The technology exists to make the deposition process more affordable, more streamlined, more efficient, and more environmentally friendly. So why haven't we made the collective switch?

The Introduction of Paperless Depositions. Depositions are the last holdout from the eDiscovery Revolution. In every other area of your case, you're working with electronic documents. You're reviewing electronically, you're producing electronically, but when it comes to depositions, you're still printing out folders and boxes of documents to pass around the table. The shift to paperless depositions is happening, and we'll walk you through how to prepare and participate in paper free depositions.

Native and Electronic Documents.

The types of documents being produced through the discovery process are starting to change. What happens when you have a native document that you want to question a witness about? We'll share how to memorialize the interaction between your witness and native files.

Witness Interaction with Electronic Files.

What if you need your witness to perform tasks like circling or highlighting an area of an electronic document? Technology exists that will not only allow your witness to make annotations on an electronic document, but to capture the annotation in realtime.
